

“To plant a garden is to believe in tomorrow.”
– Audrey Hepburn

Dear Taylor Community,

Hope springs eternal even on this dreary Monday. These photos of some of our resident gardeners at work remind me that we are surrounded by people who trust that tomorrow holds a possibility of better things.

I'd venture to guess that everyone working in their gardens yesterday has had some beautiful growing seasons and some less than stellar ones. I imagine that some of your best laid garden plans have not worked out, while other years, you've just had some really good luck.

Like gardening, life hands us unexpected joys and disappointments. When we have an especially good harvest, it's satisfying to know that our hard work has paid off. It also feels good to share our success with others. When our garden is a complete flop, it's humbling to know that even when we do everything right, things don't always end up as we plan—often for reasons completely out of our control.

And so on this rainy Monday in the midst of a pandemic, I want to say thank you to our resident gardeners for reminding us to believe in the possibility of tomorrow.

Be well, take care of one another, and please keep washing those hands.

Everyone knows that more mature people are among the best employees. Dedicated, responsible, long term, knowledgeable, they almost can't be beat. Walmart hired a gentleman to be a "greeter" at the entrance to the store. Everyone loved him. He was kind, gracious, intelligent, witty, always smiling, always helpful. He had one flaw: he was always late for work. Finally the manager approached and asked about his tardiness.

"Yes," he replied, "I know I'm always late. It is a bad habit I nurtured for years."

"Well," said the manager, "what did the others where you worked say about this lateness?"

"They said, 'Here's your coffee, Admiral.'"

- I just got back from a pleasure trip. I took my mother-in-law to the airport.
- Someone stole all my credit cards but I won't be reporting it. The thief spends less than my wife did.
